From the Pastor:

In 1980, St. John Paul II wrote:

The present day mentality, more perhaps than that of the people of the past, seems opposed to a God of mercy, and in fact tends to exclude from life and to remove from the human heart the very idea of mercy.

How much more is it true these days! The Jubilee year of mercy Pope Francis opened on Tuesday is so needed.

In a new book on God's Healing Mercy, Kathleen Beckman writes:

The rebellious world situation makes the plea for divine mercy urgent. The Church beckons us to cry out full throated to God to open the floodgates of mercy upon aching humanity. Our hope lies in divine mercy for healing global festering wounds. His mercy is intimately personal and universally transformative.

Perhaps the most important thing you can do in response to the violence in the world today is to encounter God's mercy in the Sacrament of Reconciliation.

"Every act of forgiveness," Beckman writes, "is life giving and leads to the discovery of another ray of God's mercy. When we accept God's forgiveness, we magnify the healing mercy of God. A merciful heart reflects the beauty of God in the world."

There is no doubt the world needs that beauty. Be a ray of divine mercy this Christmas by going to Confession this Advent.

Weekly quote from St. Philip Neri:

"Penitents ought not to go to confession for temporal ends, to get alms and the like. We must continually pray to God for the conversion of sinners, thinking of the joy there is in heaven both to God and the angels in the conversion of each separate sinner."
